David DiGiacomo, son of one of the original 'Mad Men', was born to be a production designer. A licensed architect with a Masters Degree from the prestigious Yale School of Architecture, DiGiacomo began his film career as an art director for commercials prior to production designing spots. Since then he's worked with many of the top commercial companies and directors. Smart and personable, David is a creative problem solver with a genuine 'can do' attitude. His intuitive command of the design process is a result of the wide range of design disciplines he has practiced. In addition to production design and architecture, David's accomplishments include interior, industrial, furniture, and environmental design. His introduction to network TV projects has opened up a whole new world of producers interested in his work. David is based in Los Angeles.
